Financial Check Up Day Offers Consumers Free Advice For Better Financial Health

Before you jump at that next credit card offer or before you bite on an investment that's too good to be true, put on the brakes and join City Councilmember Marti Emerald and a team of financial planners at a free seminar at San Diego State University.

More than thirty Certified Financial Planners will volunteer their time and expertise Saturday, September 28, from 10am-3pm, at the SDSU Alumni Center (55th and Hardy Ave).

Students will get tips on how to graduate from college with little or no debt. Young people just entering the job force or starting families can learn how to avoid costly pitfalls. Those approaching retirement could benefit from proven strategies for saving and investing their hard earned cash. And learn how to protect your money and financial records in case of natural disaster.

This educational program is open to the public; it's free with no sales pitches, just good information.

Join us and take control of your financial future.
